Composing is improvisation slowed down.

If all you have is music, then you don't have music.

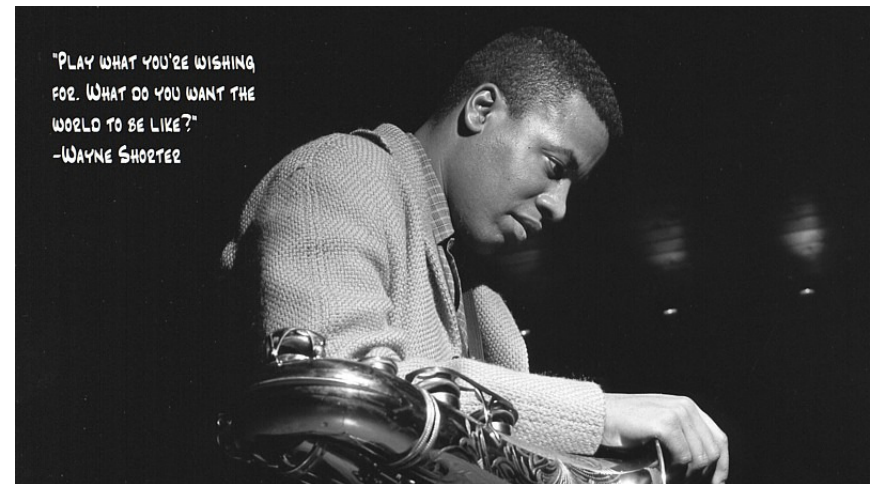

Clouds float in the same pattern only once.

It's making a statement about what life is, really. And I'm going to end the line with it.

Q: What can we do to save jazz? (2.8.11 . New York)

WS: I think that taking chances is the beginning. Being unafraid of losing this and that, jobs, friends. You don't have to have the extreme you see in biographies of Van Gogh, always being by himself or arguing with others, but you've got a lot of leeway. Knowing the difference between what you're told and what you find out for yourself; starting as an individual, being alone. We don't have to preserve jazz; we have to start preserving the stuff that comes before all of that.

The six years I was with Miles, we never talked about music. We never had a rehearsal. Jazz shouldn't have any mandates. Jazz is not supposed to be something that's required to sound like jazz. For me, the word 'jazz' means, 'I dare you.' How do you rehearse the unknown?
