The Saint John Coltrane Church is an African Orthodox church located in San Francisco. The church believes that jazz composer and saxophonist John Coltrane a saint, and uses his music and iconography as a focal point in their services. Earlier in its history, the church saw Coltrane as Christ incarnate (and Charlie Parker as John the Baptist), but they have since "demoted" him to their patron saint.

The Coltrane church was founded in 1971 by Franzo and Marina King as the "One Mind Temple Evolutionary Transitional

Body of Christ." The church's founders claim that they were inspired by a 1965 Coltrane concert at which Franzo felt "the presence of God." Franzo King refers to this epiphany as a "sound baptism which touched their hearts and minds," and claims that "Trane was not just a jazz musician "but one who was chosen to guide souls back to God." They are really into A Love Supreme.

The church, in addition to more conventional social outreach, offers music classes and runs a four-hour weekly radio show of Coltrane's music.

The St. John Coltrane African Orthodox Church is like no other in the entire world.

Archbishop King and his wonderful family are very welcoming to all the folks from around the globe who are attracted to this sonic pleasure dome of Coltrane music. Love is always their message, measured out with a revolutionary spirit of truth telling.

Musicians are well respected, and they come from all four corners to feed their chops; but this is much different than a mere jam session, and the dignity of this great music instills a humble respect.
